COURSE LEVEL STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOME(S) Supported by this course:

1. demonstrate several complete dances in different tap styles.
2. demonstrate advanced facets of dance performance such as phrasing, quality variation, focus, energy flow, and total body expression.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:
1. experience of performing contemporary and traditional tap dances on a continuing basis.
2. earn several complete dances in different tap styles. The students would be exposed to different styles of jazz music for the tap dancer and the elements of jazz music including different meters, rhythms, and syncopations.

3. work closely with an instructor in the creative process of choreography. The students would be exposed to the choreographic images and inspirations from which the faculty member works as well as discussions of choreographic form, structure, and organization. Students would be encouraged to develop their own aesthetic values and sensibilities.

4. work cooperatively with each other—leading and following, sharing, and moving together. Each student would develop his or her sense of discipline as well as his or her creativity.

5. develop awareness of the more advanced facets of dance performance such as phrasing, quality variation, focus, energy flow, and total body expression.

6. grow as an individual by expanding his or her kinesthetic awareness, movement vocabulary through improvisation, and powers of observation.

7. grow in his or her appreciation of the joys, problems, and responsibilities of perfecting and performing a dance work.

COURSE CONTENT:

LECTURE CONTENT:
The class would meet in the dance studio either one day a week for two hours for the 1.0 unit class or two days a week for two hours each session for the 2.0 unit class. A short warm-up would be followed by discussion, evaluation, a rehearsal of the current choreographic work in progress.

The primary purpose of this course is to offer more advanced dance students additional opportunities to perform. The students would have a chance to learn many complete tap dances as opposed to the one or two short dances that can be learned in technique class in one semester. The performing group could perform in dance concerts in the theater or studio or in several public places in the area. The group could perform accompanied by recorded music or live musicians.

This course is designed to support an on-going ensemble of dancers. The group would be continually learning new works and growing and expanding aesthetically and technically.
